THE GREAT EXHIBITION and LONDON in 1851. REVIEWED.

By Dr. LARDNER, &c.

"An instructive and varied memento of the Great Exhibition."—Spectator.

"Dr. Lardner's book is not so much a detailed account of the objects exhibited or all the facts concerning that remarkable display, as essays on several branches of art illustrated by objects that were in the Exhibition. His work will be long valuable as a record of the progress of knowledge. It has much scientific accuracy without its harshness."—Examiner.

"This is a reprint in one thick volume of articles contributed by Dr. Lardner to the columns of the Times during the progress of the Great Exhibition. It includes practical essays on the subjects of steam power, artificial light, photography, lightning conductors, the safety lamp, electro-metallurgy, the electric telegraph, pottery, glass manufacture, railway machinery, railways of the United Kingdom, locomotion by river and railway in the United States, and a synopsis of railway transport at home and abroad. It treats of the steam marine, calico-printing, Foucault's experiment, the pianoforte, and other matters; all of them discussed in a popular way, and embodying in the most readable form a large mass of those scientific facts which have in our own day been pressed into the service of society. To Dr. Lardner's essays (which are masterpieces of popular scientific exposition) there are added in the present volume criticisms called forth among the most intelligent of our French neighbours by the late Exhibition. . . . These articles, collected within the pages of one ample volume, furnish a large mass of material for thought, and represent in a most interesting manner the present character of European industry in many of its branches. . . . . We need add no more; because a simple statement of the contents will have sufficed to recommend the book as one of the best class of records left to tell our children of the Great Exhibition and London in 1851."—Athenæum.
